

Thanks to some high tech companies you'll have a worthwhile place to go when you finally do leave your cubicle.

Your company's action can help save areas like the ancient rainforest of the Elaho Valley in British Columbia, Canada, which is currently being destroyed by International Forest Products.

These companies recognize that old growth trees belong
in a forest, not an office.

Why isn't your company taking a lead in the fight to protect our last ancient forests?
To find out how you can get involved,
visit www.forestethics.org.
Because companies of the future
don't use products of the past.

Some of the world's most dangerous hackers don't use a computer. They use chainsaws—and they are chopping their way through our last ancient forests at more than an acre a second. But some high tech companies are building a unique firewall to prevent this kind of destruction. Each one has made a significant commitment to help protect ancient forests by changing the way they buy and use paper and wood products. Unfortunately, much of the pulp for the U.S. paper market still needlessly comes from ancient forests. Today, there's no good reason to cut down 1000-year-old trees to make office supplies. Find out how your company can join this effort. Visit www.forestethics.org. Because saving trees means more than watering the ficus in the conference room.
